Australia has the highest incidence of melanoma in the world and it kills more young Australians than any other single cancer.

For Kathy Gardiner melanoma is real, and it has been since age 25. Recently diagnosed with terminal metastatic melanoma two days before her 33rd birthday; the treatment options substantially reduce. The Naked Gardiner became the creative outlet and public journal of Kathy's journey through 'clean living', spotlighting what is now becoming an all too common "young persons' disease".

The Naked Gardiner Foundation has been created to financially support Kathy in her search for better health and treatment options in Australia and overseas while supporting her personal mission of creating awareness of the importance of health and wellbeing.
